What is a CCLI# ?

Have you ever attended an Emmaus gathering, or any other type of religious service, stood up and got ready to sing and saw a “CCLI#” listed at the bottom of the screen under the copyright? You’ve probably seen hundreds or thousands of them, but what exactly is a CCLI#?

CCLI stands for Christian Copyright Licensing International, a company that was founded in the U.S. in 1988 by Howard Rachinski, who at the time was a Music Minister at a large church in Portland, Oregon. CCLI offers copyright licensing of songs and other resource materials for use in Christian worship, and has expanded to many countries throughout the world.

A copyright is an exclusive right given to an author of an original created work. It is an asset, a legal interest, protected by law. Included in the exclusive rights given to a copyright owner is the right to copy the work into any form, including digital, print, and recordings.

There have been a number of copyright disputes regarding church music over the years, although most have been settled privately. You can imagine how uncomfortable it is for a Christian songwriter to address legal entanglements with a church. Some church music leaders have made efforts to honor the law and have tried to obtain permission directly from copyright owners before making copies. This is often a time-consuming challenge and, in many cases, an administrative nightmare. Many have agreed that the copyright law is fair, but not practical. That's why churches across North America and around the globe have looked to CCLI for licenses and resources that solve the numerous copyright issues associated with common church music ministry activities.

CCLI has negotiated agreements with songwriters and publishers from around the world. This agreement allows churches to copy from over 300,000 worship songs to assist with congregational singing, which includes computer projections, songsheets, bulletin inserts, etc...

The cost of the license is determined by a church's regular attendance. The annual cost ranges from $55.00 for an attendance of 1-24 members, to $4,974.00 for attendance of over 200,000 members.

If you would like to learn more about CCLI and the Church Copyright License® you can visit their website at HTTP://US.CCLI.COM
